

“TRANSLATION”

Stan Kaufman

Abstract:

Consider your own personal library. How many of its volumes were originally written in English, a language that you can presumably read? I would bet that includes most of your books. But, there are some that were originally published in some European, Asian, African, or some other South-of-the Border language. Can you read French, Spanish, or any of the others? Most of us rely on translations. This paper deals with some of the problems of translation, linguistic, political, and religious.
